illness which forced him to relinquish
his mayoralty duties as early as last December.

His son and private secretary,

among those at the bedside when the end came.

BRITAIN NO LONGER FEARS ATTACK FROM SKY

Under Spur of Rearmament Drive, Air Force Now Has
2,250 First-Line Craft

COMPLEMENT OF 150,000

(Note: This is the first of a series of three articles on the present strength and personnel of the British army, navy, and air force.)

By James E. Brown
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
LONDON, Aug. 19.—(INS)—Numbering 150,000 officers and men, plus 104,000 reserves, the British Royal Air Force today comprises 2,250 first-line aircraft. These figures are expected to be increased one third by March 31, 1940.

At the time of the armistice, November, 1918, the Royal Air Force comprised 27,333 officers, of whom more than half were trained pilots, and 263-842 other ranks—numbers substantially in excess of any other air force.
The first line strength was 3,300.

Although the Royal Air Force was almost double its present size at the end of the World War, it is officially stated that wartime expenditure had reached $5,000,000 per day when peace
was signed.

After the war the British government in accordance with the undertaking they had given in the Versailles treaty reduced the air force drastically until, at the end of 1919, it amounted to only 4,000 officers and 31,500 other ranks.

Sir Samuel Hoare, then Secretary of State for Air, announced a plan in 1923 for the gradual establishment of a home defense air force of 52 squadrons. Thirty-nine of these were to be regulars, and rest were to be incorporated in an auxiliary air force.
The scheme was subjected to successive revisions and postponements, and by 1934, only 41 out of the 52 suggested squadrons had been formed.

Changes in the European situation caused Parliament to take a genuine expansion program, however, and, in the same year, a bill was passed providing for an increase of the home defense air forces from 52 to 75 squadrons.

Further expansion has been announced from time to time since that period, always with the view: "British air power must include a home defense air force of sufficient strength adequately to protect us against air attack by the strongest air force within striking distance of this country."

In June, 1938, Sir Kingsley Wood, Secretary of State for Air, appealed for 31,600 pilots, observers, airmen
and boys for entry during the year ending March 31. That number was obtained by the beginning of March, four weeks ahead of schedule, and the approximate total figure recruited during the year was 35,000. This is a record for the Royal Air Force.

A total of $1,303,134.50 is being spent this year on expansion.
Pilots must be between 17 and a half and 28 years of age and have an education of approximately school certificate standards. They are appointed

Here's The Answer

(By "The Stroller")

A Bristol man asked us a few days ago where the first motion picture was shown in Bristol. We admitted we didn't know, but proceeded to inquire of Edward Lynn,
manager of the Grand Theatre.

Mr. Lynn obligingly informed that the first projected picture was shown in the Colonial Theatre, but that the first motion picture of any kind in the borough was shown by his late father about 1872.

"My father displayed motion pictures in the machine he perfected in many of the public halls
here," said Mr. Lynn.

He added that his father's machine was about five inches high,
and that a smaller working model of the machine is on display now
at the New York World's Fair.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

"The Kitchen Garden" was the interesting topic discussed at the meeting of the Doylestown Nature Club at the home of Mrs. Arnold Todd, Pebble Hill Road, Doylestown. The beautiful ground with its trees, shrubbery and flowers was an ideal place for an outdoor meeting on a Summer evening.

Mrs. Charles Harper Smith and her committee very interestingly presented the subject of herbs. Mrs. Smith urged her audience to learn and know herbs and their uses and advised the reading of a number of books which she had found helpful.

"Herbs are easy to grow and they are also the weediest," she said.

Mrs. Ralph McComas followed with the reading of an interesting paper, written by Mrs. H. W. Burgher on "Medicinal Herbs of Colonial Times."

In looking for a definition for herb,
she said she found one in an old English dictionary printed in 1771, and was as follows: "Herb, a common name of all plants whose stalks or stems do not grow large enough to become wood, and so die every year when their seed has become ripe. In some the root lasts from year to year,
in some the root perishes with the stem."

The 26th annual reunion of the Pid-lock family will be held this afternoon at the Thompson-Neely House, Bowman's Hill, Washington Crossing Park.

The business meeting will be held at three p. m. John Howell, historian of the Battle Monument, Trenton, will give an historical talk on the "Battle of Trenton."

A picnic supper will conclude the program at six p. m.

Having reached beyond the 70 per cent completion mark of the new sewage treatment plant at the end of Harvey avenue, Doylestown, another payment of Federal funds was received by Louis Morman, secretary of the Doylestown Borough Council, in accordance with the contract signed when construction started on the project.

Announcement of the payment under the terms of the 1938 Public Works Administration Act which made a 45 per cent outright Federal grant available to the community was made by Michael C. Madera, resident engineer for the Federal Works Agency, Public Works Administration.

DOYLESTOWN TO START PARKING ENFORCEMENT

Localities Who Violate The Restrictions Will Be Fined $1.00

ADOPT COLORED TAGS

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 19.—Strict enforcement of the two-hour parking and one-way traffic ordinance in this borough will start Monday morning.
Dr. John J. Sweeney, Burgess, announced yesterday. Out-of-State motorists will be shown all the courtesy possible on first offenses, and so will localities and others shopping here but second-offenders will have to pay the fine for violations.

State street and Oakland avenue,
both made one-way streets recently,
have been properly marked and local motorists have had a week's trial to acquaint themselves with the regulations. The same holds true with the two-hour parking regulation in the central business section.

Starting Monday, localities will be fined $1.00 for violations, this sum to be paid at the police department or to the Borough Clerk after the car has been tagged. If the motorist fails to appear within five days, a warrant will be issued and charges lodged.
Motorists getting red tickets will come in this classification.

Yellow tickets will be issued as a warning to first-offenders who will only have to appear at the police station for a reprimand and a further explanation of the laws. White tickets will go to out-of-state motorists who will be warned but welcomed to return again and obey the parking regulations, but not fined.

Two Arrange Shower In Honor of Mrs. A. Norato

At the home of Mrs. J. V. MacBlaine, Trenton avenue and Jackson street, a delightful party was held Thursday evening in honor of Mrs. Antonio Norato, 1614 Trenton avenue. The affair was a surprise miscellaneous shower for Mrs. Norato, who was formerly Miss Barbara Lynch. The affair was given by Mrs. MacBlaine and Mrs.
Stanley Keers, 1528 Trenton avenue.
A social time was enjoyed, and refreshments served. In the center of the table was a white bell and a miniature bride and groom.

Those attending: Mrs. Lamont
White, Mrs. Clifton Wicks, Mrs. Albert
Lynch, Mrs. William Cranston, Mrs.
William Campbell, Mrs. Frank Lynn,
Mrs. Allen Lebo, Jr., and daughter, Patricia, Mrs. Antonio Norato, Miss Violet Keers, Elizabeth Cranston, Mary Brannigan, Anna Keers, Mary Campbell,
Florence MacBlaine, Bristol; Mrs.
Paul Marsh, Mrs. Virginia Blatz and Mrs. Charles Richman, Croydon.

The check received was for the amount of $8,000 which represents 10 per cent of the total cost of the project. Twenty-five per cent of the total cost has been previously received,
making a total of 35 per cent of grant funds received to date.

Under these projects private contractors take the work on open competitive bids and are paid by the local community for work completed. In turn the local community is then reimbursed from Federal funds for a total of 45 per cent of the project.

Progress on the new sewage treatment plant is satisfactory and it is to be completed about August 30.

RECOVER TWO MOTORS STOLEN FROM BOATHOUSE

Arrest of Trio in Philadelphia
Leads to Recovery of Loot
Taken From Bridgewater

MOTORS ARE RETURNED

Two outboard motors stolen from the boathouse of George B. Cherry, Bridgewater, on July 9th, were recovered by the police yesterday when they were found at Munchu, N. J. The motors are now at the Bristol police station having been brought there yesterday by Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo.

The Cherry place was broken into on July 9th when an entrance was gained through the roof of the building. Two outboard motors were stolen.

Friday three Philadelphia youths
were taken into custody by the Philadelphia police in connection with robbery and on being questioned it was learned that the trio had sold two outboard motors to George Wilson, Munchu, N. J.

Bucks County Detective Anthony
Russo was advised by the Phila. police and yesterday Russo and Czernecki, Penna. Motor Police, questioned the youths further and it is alleged that Howard Dickes, 19, 1730 Frankford avenue, Thomas McDonald, 21, 1603 N.
Phillips street, had stolen the motors
from the Cherry place and then sold them to Wilson.

The third member of the gang arrested by the Philadelphia police was John Plant, 19, 1746 Howard street.

Will Sleep 5 1/2 Days In Search For Cancer Cure

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 19.—(INS)—
Out in Stockport, Iowa, Max Harlan, 42-year-old farmer, was preparing to leave his home today to come to Philadelphia to sleep.

But it will be no ordinary sleep that Harlan, a sufferer of cancer, will undergo. For he will submit to a five-day ice-packed "frozen sleep" at Temple University Hospital in a test of a new cure for cancer announced last May at the American Medical Association Convention in St. Louis.

Harlan's body will be packed in cracked ice, lowering his temperature from the normal 98.6 degrees to 85 to 90 degrees. Then, needing no food and showing no signs of life, he will lie in a state of suspended animation until the five days are up.

Dr. Temple Fay, noted head of the university's neurosurgery department, and Dr. Lawrence W. Smith, head of the department of pathology, developed the treatment and will supervise the experiment on Harlan.

At the end of his frigid slumber,
Harlan will be awakened by a warm drink poured down his throat through a tube and will, if all goes well, show
no ill effects of his slumber.

According to experimental results,
the sleep amid the cracked ice should halt the further growth of cancer
which is spreading through Harlan's pancreas. Dr. F. L. Nelson, Harlan's physician, will accompany him on the trip.

Germans in Slovakia

London, Aug. 19.—German military domination of Slovakia was fully achieved today, according to British press interpretations, through a German Slovakian army pact. Direct advices from Berlin and Bratislava minimized the importance of the military understanding, but observers were quick to point out that German military control of Slovakia might have two important effects—it could increase pressure on Hungary to unite with the Rome-Berlin axis force, and it would facilitate access to Poland by German armies in case of war. British government quarters refused to be shaken out of their attitude of studied surface calmness. Spokesmen for the Police say the men admitted stealing the wire and that they were later go-

THOSE INFORMAL AMERICANS

In spite of much propaganda to the effect that Americans are less wild and woolly than their English cousins believe, in their hearts the English suspect the worst. The veneer of tradition is thin on the American side of the Atlantic. Every once in a while to the probable satisfaction of the Britishers, an American gives proof that we are indeed a carefree undisciplined lot.

The latest gentleman from this side of the Atlantic to shock London observers is young Joseph Nangle, special master and traveling commissioner of the Circuit Court of St. Louis, who has been investigating British claims to the fortune of a gentleman named Campbell who died intestate in the United States last year. Mr. Campbell and his heirs, however, faded into the background of the London accounts of the hearings.

Mr. Nangle is their hero, who wigless and without a Bible, swore in his claimants all in a lump and provided large brass ash trays for their convenience. Apparently Mr. Nangle failed to convince British reporters that he was merely an investigator, not a judge. One and all they exclaimed over this typically informal manner of "conducting proceedings according to U. S. law and custom." And as if to make certain that the English public should know the worst, Mr. Nangle permitted photographers to take pictures in the "courtroom" while he smoked and chatted with the witnesses.

From now on the average British tourist in the United States will blanch with terror at the thought of becoming entangled in the toils of United States law. Mr. Nangle's informal methods may well lead to demands for extraterritorial rights such as foreigners have enjoyed in the past in the more "heathen" countries.

British surprise at Mr. Nangle's methods finds no echo in the United States. We merely wonder a little wistfully what might happen if the British should ever meet Irvin S. Cobb's Judge Priest in the flesh.

RAINBOW GOLD

For $2 a man who lives in a town called Anna, Ill., bought a bit of paper which he cashed in for $10, 772.40. The story of this transaction is found on the sports pages in the department which is given over to what once was called the Sport of Kings but today is one of the favorite of millions.

Theoretically, race meets in which only thoroughbreds participate are staged for the purpose of improving the breed, but most of those who pay their way through the gate and at the betting stands know little and care less about that. The bet is one of the first purposes of attendance, although it is not necessary to frequent a track in order to place a wager. Most cities and hamlets and crossroads harbor book-makers who will take your money and pay, if you win, maybe. But, as some fellows say, "We like to see them run."

The chap who won the purse of gold in five figures didn't bother to see them run; he telegraphed his bet and won the biggest daily payoff in the history of American racing. Washington Park now is chalked up as holder of a record which may stand for a long time or may be broken tomorrow. Such is the way of horse racing, and gambling, a lure for those who dream of getting something for nothing.

AT THE CAPITOL

By International News Service
HARRISBURG, Aug. 19.—One definite sign of an approaching political campaign: Revival of a feud of long duration between Gov. Arthur H. James and State Treasurer F. Clair Ross. . . . Bitter political enemies since last year's primary campaign, the Governor and Ross took to telling each other to "mind your own business." . . . Since Governor James became the State's chief executive, Ross has probably been his most severe critic.

Latest recurrence of the feud came about in this manner: Ross, in a speech at Pittsburgh before the Young Democratic convention, declared that the James Administration would be forced to impose new taxes, specifically mentioning a sales tax. . . . At his press conference the Governor took exception to Ross' statements and told the State Treasurer, one of two surviving Democratic big-job holders, to pay attention to this own job.

The Governor, plainly irked by Ross' speech, said he did not intend to impose new taxes, sales or otherwise, unless absolutely necessary. . . . He assailed Ross for allegedly boosting salaries in the Treasury Department after the Republicans took control in the State. . . . And then, to climax his outburst, he told Ross that the State Treasurer had not been told how to run his office and that Ross should do likewise with respect to the Governor's office. . . .

Republican leaders, aware that unless there is a decided business improvement and a corresponding decrease in the State's relief expenditures a special session will be necessary, hailed an increase in the State's WPA quota as a method of easing the relief burden considerably. . . . The WPA raised the quota by 21,000. . . . Public Assistance Secretary Howard L. Russell termed the boost especially significant in view of the burdensome relief rolls, heaviest in four years. . . .

Secretary of Commerce Richard P. Brown, who has spent long hours at his job since his appointment by Governor James, feels that Pennsylvania industries, previously hindered and retarded by archaic laws, are in better position now to compete with rival plants in other States than they have been in years. . . . Brown said that new laws enacted by the 1939 Legislature removed "obstacles which hindered industrial growth and retarded employment in recent years."

Col. Augustine S. Janeway, who was succeeded on Monday by James L. Stuart, of Pittsburgh, as executive director of the General State Authority, plans having a knee operation as soon as his two-month period as Stuart's advisor ends. . . . Col. Janeway was once a "yearling" at the U. S. Naval Academy and started his military career in 1906. . . . He was active in both the Mexican border campaign and the World War. . . . Was appointed executive director of the $65,000,000 GSA by former Governor Earle in February, 1937.

The $6,000,000 Finance Building which completes the present Capitol group will be ready for occupancy, workmen say, by October 1. . . . The huge building, subject of an investigation by the legislative committee probing alleged graft in the Earle Administration, was partially flooded recently when a 10,000 gallon water tank on top of the building burst. . . . Workmen are busy correcting unsatisfactory items revealed when the PWA and GSA officials inspected the structure.

"REDHEADS ARE LUCKY"

BY VERA BROWN

SYNOPSIS

A romance of the big league baseball world seems blooming when Handsome Larry Regan, spectacular and erratic young pitcher, decides to marry the dashing little redhead, "Mike" Shannon, hard-working magazine counter girl at the Eureka Hotel. She is the main support of her family and by no means sure that she wants to marry such a wild oats sower as "Handsome." But she is trying to reform that most promising of southpaws (left hand pitchers) and so invites him to her humble home where he meets "the folks" and later presents the reluctant red-head with a sparkling solitaire when they go to a nearby store for ice cream for her invalid brother, Jimmie.

CHAPTER IX

"Now leave that ring on. I mean it. We're going to get married. Crisp was swell about it. Thought it was a good idea," said Regan.

"I'm glad Mr. Crisp approved." Handsome did not even appear to notice the tone of Mike's voice.

"Listen, Mike, I'll go great guns with you around. You're lucky for me. I know. I knew the moment I saw that 'carrot top' of yours in the cloak room."

"Redheads are lucky for you, Larry?"

"Ons redhead is." Mike gripped the edge of the table. "Larry, you must be sensible. I'm glad if I've helped you, if you think I'm your friend. But for anything else—"

"Don't be silly. I'm nuts about you. I can't do anything without you!"

"Putting aside all other considerations, Larry, I've a pretty big responsibility at home. Dad isn't well and he earns very little. I keep things going."

"What the heck? If I'm in the big dough, if I get in the World's Series coin this year, we should worry." "I can't let you support my family," Mike shook her head impatiently. "Besides, that's all beside the point. Larry, I couldn't marry anybody I didn't love."

"That seemed to amaze Handsome: 'But you love me. Of course, you do! So what's the argument?'"

"Larry, Larry!" It was like arguing with Jimmie. The old Jimmie. Something in her voice warned Larry.

"I've known a lot of girls in my time, and you're the first one who ever made me feel like this! Mike, there couldn't be anybody else. You're the skipper from now on!" He leaned across the table.

"Kiss me."

"Crisp on home then—"

And he pulled her after him, leaving their unfastened coat on the table.

Out into the soft May evening they hurried. Under the spell of the spring night, everything seemed different. Men and women strolled in unaccustomed leisure. Even the automobiles seemed to move more gracefully. The night was working a miracle of romance in the city.

Never for a moment did Handsome doubt what Mike's answer would be. He stopped her in the shadow of a moth eaten elm tree near the corner and kissed her.

"You're wonderful!"

Mike's head was swimming. She tried to think straight.

"I'm no good without you, Mike. Together we'll show them! You see, you're lucky for me. I feel it!"

He held the hand which was his ring in both his as they walked slowly toward her home.

season begins. It's great down there. You've never been south, have you?"

Mike had never been any place, only to Manhattan from Brooklyn, and to Coney Island and nearby beaches now and then. She caught her breath as she envisioned what life with Handsome might be. She'd make him love her, make herself so necessary to him, that he'd never leave her. But if she failed? If he grew tired? Like a warning, Mike could see the endless pageant of women who would fawn on Handsome. They did now, even when he

"But things change." "We won't." His voice was so emphatic that Mike's heart leaped. They walked on in silence for a little. Then Mike got up her courage to speak.

"Larry, if you ever change your mind—no, now listen to me. If you ever do, or you might," then she added, "or I might."

"Of course, you won't." "But if you should, you'll be honest with me, Larry?"

"That's easy. For it won't happen. Besides, if it did, I wouldn't have to tell you. You'd know it any-

"Stop kicking, Skipper!" soothed the husky Handsome as he carried the embarrassed Mike upstairs. . . .

was a rookie pitcher. What would they do if he became truly famous? "I'll manage. I won't fail," she told herself. But that insistent voice: "If you should?"

"I won't." Mike was defiant. She'd take what fate offered. Be grateful for her chance of happiness!

But Mike did not tell Handsome she'd marry him. That was unnecessary. He'd known it all along.

"I'll dress you up so you'll make Dusty Lee's wife look like a back number," he boasted. "You've got the looks, you're miles and miles ahead of her!"

Mike had to laugh. He was such a boy.

"Now let's go home and tell Jimmie," he suggested.

But on that point Mike was firm. She was so afraid of this sudden happiness. "Wait a little, Larry. Give me time. Let me get used to the idea."

Handsome grinned at her panic: "Say, everybody in town will know it in a little while. You see if they don't. Those things won't keep. The gang at the hotel will guess. They're talking enough now."

"Promise, Larry? Just a little while. It's just—"

Mike's voice trailed off. She could not tell him that she still did not believe that this could happen.

"You might change your mind." Mike tried to keep her voice light.

Handsome stopped still in the middle of the street and turned her around, facing him: "Look at me," Mike obeyed.

way. But what a lot of silly talk. You know it is too."

Mike did not answer him. It was odd in all their conversations, it never occurred to either of them that Handsome might not succeed, that he might be just another flash in the pan of the national game.

"Fame does queer things to people, Larry."

"It won't to me."

"But, my sweet, it isn't you, it's other people. They do things to you."

"Honey, I've been something of a hero all my life. Even in grade school. I could always play ball. Say, I never had to do my arithmetic, or my algebra. There was always some guy to do it for me. I'm not a fool, Mike. I know I'm just a great big clunk, strong as an ox. Give me another kiss. You're not the kind of girl who'll be a jealous wife."

They had reached the shabby apartment building Mike called home. Going up the second flight of stairs, Handsome picked up Mike in his arms and carried her.

"Put me down! Somebody will see us."

"Stop kicking, Skipper! You weigh practically nothing."

At the door of their apartment Handsome set her down and kissed the top of her head.

"Now, forward march!"

Inside they found Jimmie waiting impatiently for them. "I thought you weren't ever coming back," he said as Mike smoothed his pillows bent to kiss him.

BY VERA BROWN

A romance of the big league baseball world seems blooming when Handsome Larry Regan, spectacular young pitcher, decides to marry magnetic mahogany-haired "Mike" Shannon, hard-working magazine counter girl at the Eureka Hotel. She is the main support of her family and by no means sure that she wants to marry such a wild oats sower as "Handsome." But she is trying to reform that most promising of southpaws (left hand pitchers) and so invites him to her humble home where he meets "the folks." Mike refuses to become engaged because of family obligations, but Handsome insists on giving her a diamond solitaire when they go out to get some ice cream for little Jimmie, Mike's invalid brother.

CHAPTER X

Mike left Handsome with Jimmie while she went into the kitchen. It was when she came back with the ice cream that his sharp eyes saw her ring.

"Gee!" he said pointing. Mike turned crimson. Handsome laughed delightedly. "You see? I warned you."

Mike came over with Jimmie's ice cream.

"Darling, will you keep a secret? You're the only one who's going to know for a little while."

The boy's eyes were round: "I knew he was your fellow! You can't fool me, Mike!"

"But you promise?" "I promise."

Later Handsome was so kind with Mike's father, that her heart was completely won. He seemed to ignore the shabby room, was quite at home, insisted on wiping the ice cream plates for her mother.

When Mary and Jack came in, they sat at Handsome's feet to worship. Jimmie insisted that they all crowd into his room so he could hear everything. Mike kept the stone of her hand and nobody noticed it. But Jimmie's dancing eyes showed he was thrilled at being in on the secret.

Afterward, Mike came to recognize that night as the happiest in her life.

When Handsome had gone, and Mike and her sister were in their little bedroom, Mary insisted on talking it all over. And it seemed hours to Mike before Mary fell asleep. When she could hear the younger girl's regular breathing, Mike got out of her bed and tucked her lovely ring under the pile of handkerchiefs in her dresser drawer.

Back in bed again, sleep was a long time coming. Now that she was alone in the dark, she was desperately afraid of what she had done.

"I can never hold him." She could not suppress that sad thought.

Although Handsome was two years older than she, he seemed younger to her. Mike had been working since she was 15. The last two years at the Eureka Hotel had taught her a lot about life, and little of that was reassuring. Not that Mike had an inferiority complex. She didn't. She knew quite well she was a pretty girl, and intelligent.

But she also knew there were thousands of pretty girls in New York, girls with lovely clothes, plain girls who were glamorous because they spent their whole life trying to look—and be—alluring. They were amusing and entertaining.

"I never look quite right. There's never time for enough manicures and such." And never money enough, either. But Handsome believed in her. That was her greatest asset.

"I'll never fail him." She promised that from the bottom of her heart.

Next morning when Mike opened her eyes the sunshine streamed in her narrow window and her fears of the night before seemed absurd. Mary was gone. Mike jumped out of bed and ran to the dresser. She took out her ring and looked at it.

"I can't believe it is mine." She kissed it, put it away carefully again. But she could not leave its beauty hidden like that. She had to look at it once more before she dashed for her shower. She'd be late. She flew into her clothes.

At the corner, Mike bought a paper. She settled back to read the sports pages when she finally got onto the train. She was completely and utterly happy.

This morning there was no mention of Handsome. Everybody seemed to have dropped discussion of his fight with Harper.

When she finally came on duty at the magazine counter, Roy Burke looked at the clock.

"Good girl. Two minutes ahead of time," he said. "You look in the pink. Am I glad of this split shift. I'm seeing the baseball game this afternoon."

Mike smiled at him. Roy was a very devoted admirer and one of Handsome's fans.

"Handsome was just here. He'll be back," Roy added.

Mike did not answer.

"And I used to think he hung around here to talk baseball with me," he added.

Ten minutes later, Handsome came hurrying over to her. "How's the skipper? You look swell. Why didn't you wear your ring?"

"Remember your promise?" "I remember. I'm on my way to the Stadium. Be sure and wait for me tonight. We've got to celebrate. . . . Oh, I mean with ginger ale," as he saw a shadow suddenly darken her eyes.

"Keep your fingers crossed, for me today. Ray says Dusty's arm's gone bad. I hope it's plenty—"

But Mike stopped him with a cutting: "Larry!"

"Well, I've got to get a break some time. My good luck is his bad luck! Besides, now I'm practically a family man, I've got to begin going places." He leaned across the counter: "Pretend I kissed you. See you at six." And he was gone.

Hours later, Mike was keeping an eye on the clock, and as it crept toward game time, she was nervous. If only Handsome could come through, get a start on the right road, she felt sure he could succeed.

About two o'clock, old Mr. Jenkins came over to her counter: "When I feel low, I like to come and talk to you, Mike," he said beaming.

"You're nice to say that, Mr. Jenkins, but all I do is tell you my troubles. I don't realize that until after you're gone."

"That's what friends are for," he responded. He did not add that the girl's fine spirit was a tonic to him.

Conversation today veered to an old subject with them. For a long time, Mr. Jenkins had been trying to persuade Mike to take a business course. He felt sure Mike would make a good secretary. She had intelligence, she would work.

"I suppose now there's no chance of your taking that business course," he said.

"I'm afraid not, the way things are at home."

"How's Jimmie coming?" "Just about the same. I haven't told mother yet. She still believes he's going to get well. I've got a little money in the bank, but I don't dare spend it."

"My offer still stands. I'll lend you the money any time you want to go to school. I know I can get you a job afterward."

Mike's eyes were dark as she answered: "You've always been so kind, Mr. Jenkins. But I'm afraid now that's got to wait."

She did not explain how her life had changed. She'd hoped, if Jimmie improved, to do what Mr. Jenkins suggested. But now things were different. By winter she'd be married to Handsome. But she could not explain that today, although she'd have liked to confide in Mr. Jenkins.

Into the midst of their conversation, Mr. Downey burst with, "Get your hat on Mike, quick." He was puffing in his excitement. "Wish just called me from the Stadium. Handsome's pitching today against Detroit. He wants you out there."

"But how can I leave her?" "That's all right. I'll manage. I caught Roy before he got off for the game. He's wild, but it can't be helped. Wish will take care of him. Hurry up. You haven't much time. Wish will be waiting for you at the press gate."

Mike stood silent for a moment: "Must I go alone?" She was in a sudden panic. She'd only been in the big stadium once in her life. What knowledge she had of baseball was gleaned from sand lot games

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL THEATRE

There'll be no more stick and hip waving for Frank Jenks and Dorothea Kent.

Jenks has permanently laid aside his baton and Dorothea her dancing slippers in preparation for a quick trip to stardom planned for them by Universal Studios. In "Strange Faces," newspaper film now playing at the Bristol Theatre, the young comedy team has its initial starring role.

Teamed together for the first time, Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., are seen as three comrade sergeants whose adventures form the basis of the stirring screen version of the famous ballad by Rudyard Kipling, "Gunga Din," at the Bristol Theatre, Sunday.

The three stars, each of whom has soared to new fame in recent months, portray a trio of British soldiers stationed at an army post in northern India.

GRAND THEATRE

"On borrowed time," is one of the most daring and unusual stories ever filmed. It is a thought-provoking and inspiring story, full of heart-warming humor and affection. And at last the grandfather traps Death, traps him in the branches of an old apple tree. "On Borrowed Time" opens today at the Grand Theatre.

Charlie Chan flies half-way 'round the world to the playground of beautiful women in his latest film. It's not a divorce but a murderer the inimitable Oriental detective is after in the 20th Century-Fox thriller, "Charlie Chan in Reno," which brings Sidney Toler to the Grand Theatre today.

MANY EXPERTS CALL MARVIN A REAL BOXING PROSPECT

Boxer Who Fights Here Monday Night Has Been Dubbed The "Golden Boy"

HAS WON THREE K.O.'S

Johnny Glover Will Be his Opponent Here Monday Night

In one of the four round bouts on Joe Grunio's boxing show at St. Ann's Arena here Monday night, there is carded a young man whom many experts in the boxing game, call a "real" prospect. His name is Paul Marvin and he has been dubbed the "Golden Boy" because of his blonde complexion. He is a throwback to the Nordic giants of old and gives one the impression that he might be one of the descendants of these great Vikings of the Sea.

However, Paul is Irish and formerly attended Rutgers University where he was striving for a diploma when the grim reaper came along and changed the course of his life. With the death of his father it was necessary for Paul to give up his schooling and go out and start earning a living. Having boxed around in the Intercollegiate, he decided to take up boxing for his livelihood. So promising does he look that his manager Frank Fowles, who had retired from the boxing game after his former contender, Billy Jones, of light heavyweight fame had failed in his quest for the title, decided that he would have one more fling with Marlin. That is how good Marvin looks up to date. Fowles procured Jack Brady to train the lad and they have set forth on the long climb to a shot at the heavyweight championship. Both are convinced that Marvin will make the grade as he has the makings of a real fighter.

To date he has won his three professional contests by knockouts and as an amateur he won 18 contests within the roped arena. Paul boxes Johnny Glover in one of the bouts on the card featuring Young Terry, of Trenton, and Pat "Wildman" Mangini of Philadelphia. The semi-windup shows Sam Sinda of Trenton against Joe Rivers of Philadelphia for six rounds, while another six rounder presents "Goat" Kennedy of Philadelphia who made a hit here his last time out appearing against hard punching Fred Nebo of Phila. The other four in addition to the Marvin-Glover set to will show another heavyweight contest with Harry "Giant" Kelly of Camden weighing 250 pounds against Joe Brickell. The opener has Joe Perry of Moorestown, N. J., against Johnny Rennie of Phila. The first contest will enter the ring at 8.45 p. m.

LANDRETH NINE TO PLAY RIVERSIDE TEAM HERE

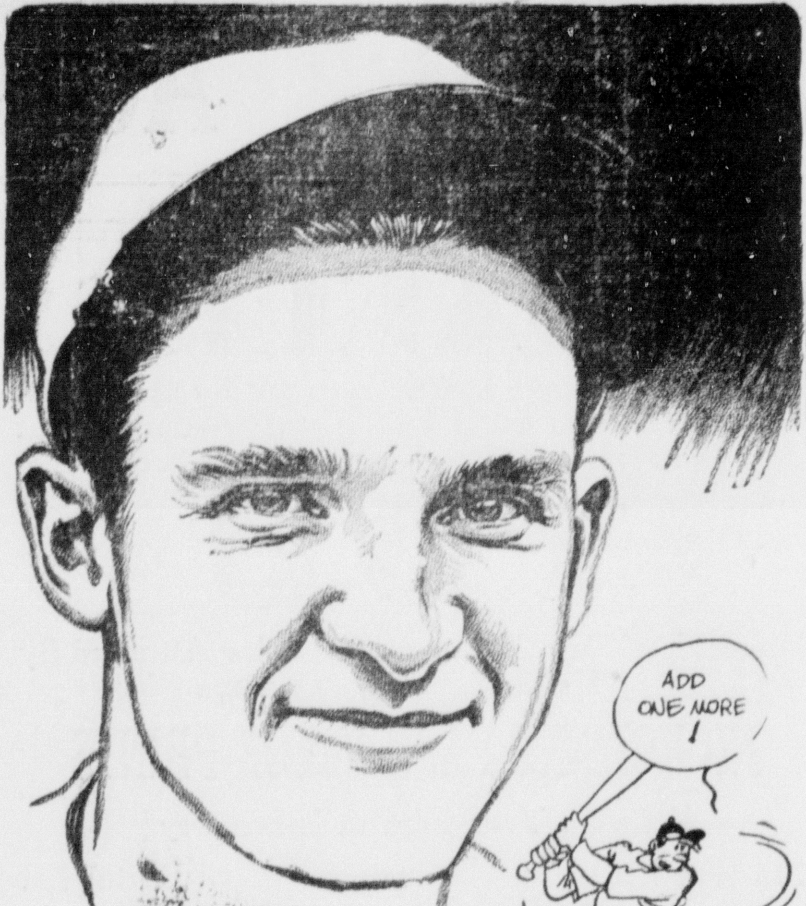

Tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock Riverside, the best club in the Burlington County League, will play the Farmers at Landreth Ball Park. Manager "Benny" Edge will probably send Flag to the mound. Flag is one of the best pitchers in the league, having gained his experience in the Eastern Shore League. Tom Edge will be behind the plate.

Manager Landreth will probably call on Lonnie Heister to pitch.

These clubs have met twice this season, each winning a game, so Sunday's game will be the deciding contest and should result in a close score, so the ball fans looking for a good game should see one at Landreth Ball Park.

The Landreth Club is now off on a ball field. Game will start at 2.30 new winning streak, having taken five games in a row.

SOFTBALL TEAMS TO CLASH IN A SERIES

Softball fans of this vicinity will see their most thrilling games next week when the Fifth Ward Sporting Club and the Profy teams clash in a three-game series. The Fifth Ward club won the upper division of the Community League, while Profy's beat out St. Ann's for the lower division.

The opening tilt will be played on the Bristol high school field, Monday evening, at 6.30 o'clock. The second game will be played Wednesday evening on Leedom's field. The third game, if necessary, will also be played on Leedom's field, the following week.

The Community Center, sponsors of the league, invites all softball fans to be on hand when the two best clubs in this section clash for the borough championship.

SAXONS TO OPPOSE RIVERSIDE JR. NINE

Tomorrow afternoon the Bristol Saxons will play hosts to the undefeated Riverside Jr. Nine of Riverside, N. J., who at the present time are riding on the crest of a 22-game winning streak.

The Bristol Saxons are confident of breaking this streak and in doing so, Manager Sam Fiorelli will present his strongest lineup. While the Saxons engage this team on Grundy's diamond, the senior team from Riverside will play the Landreth nine at the Landreth ball park, so on Sunday Bristol will have quite a number of Riverside rooters as visitors.

A large crowd is expected to be on hand to see these two junior team battle, for there is always a good game in store when the Saxons are on the
